STEAMBOAT SPRINGS

George Krawzoff cleaned out his desk Friday, his last day working for the city of Steamboat Springs.

As the city's transportation director for more than a decade, Krawzoff was a champion of multi-modal solutions to the city's transportation needs. He plans to bring a similar focus to Denver and the Colorado Transportation Commission, a body Gov. Bill Ritter appointed him to. The state Senate confirmed the appointment this week.

Krawzoff said commission members have typically come from the road construction industry, rather than transit. Krawzoff believes Ritter is intentionally shifting the commission's focus with his most recent appointments.

"I think the governor has made a decisive statement that he supports multi-modal solutions to the state's transit problems," Krawzoff said. "My goals are in line with that. I'm looking for multi-modal solutions."

Krawzoff added that he is also a realist that understands
