Routt County has 20 more electronic voting machines to use in upcoming elections, but the county's top election official expressed "serious concerns" Thursday that a new statewide voter registration system could crash in November.

At a meeting of the local Citizen Election Review Committee, Routt County Clerk and Recorder Kay Weinland said county commissioners have authorized the purchase of 20 additional voting machines from Texas-based Hart InterCivic, raising the county's total to 55 machines for use in August primaries and November's general election. Thursday's meeting also included discussion of the new Statewide Colorado Registration and Election system, known as SCORE II, which Weinland said is placing the state's entire voter registration database on a single server in the Denver metro area.

Weinland described SCORE II as a slow system — generated by federal requirements — that could be overloaded by massive voter turnouts across the state. The system will be accessed to verify registra-
