Nick Smith hits a ramp on his BMX bike at the Howelsen Hill Skate Park on Tuesday afternoon in Steamboat Springs. The day started out cloudy and cold, but by early afternoon, the mountain air had given way to blue sky and high-flying tricks.

Triple Crown approved

Steamboat City Council passes two-year contract by 4-2 vote

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS

The Steamboat Springs City Council concluded five months of Triple Crown contract negotiations Tuesday night when it voted, 4-2, to bring the national youth baseball tournaments back to Steamboat for at least one more year, and possibly two.

Triple Crown Sports founder Dave King said it wasn't meant to be this difficult.

"The process has been a tremendous amount of undue wear and tear on both sides for something that works this well," King said before the beginning of Tuesday's meeting at Centennial Hall.

Councilwoman Meg Bentley and Councilman Steve Ivancie were the dissenting votes; Councilman Walter Magill was absent.

Councilman Scott Myller said he was almost persuaded to reverse his earlier support for two more years of Triple Crown, but not quite.

"I heard from a lot of constituents," Myller said. "I think our community is getting tired of always being busy and the river being flooded with people.
