During Rosh Hashanah afternoon, it is customary to walk to a river or spring and recite special prayers at a Tashlikh ceremony. The traditional ceremony requires that pockets are emptied of all bread or cookie crumbs and cast into the water. This is symbolic of casting off sins and beginning the Jewish New Year with a clean slate.

Congressman John Salazar said Tuesday that he will not support a financial bailout bill without greater protection for taxpayers on the Western Slope.

U.S. Rep. Salazar, a San Luis Valley Democrat, voted against the financial bailout bill, titled the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, on Monday. The congressman said that before he could throw his support to a measure intended to rescue the financial markets, he would need to see more specificity in areas including federal insurance of bank deposits, recoupment of taxpayers' investments and the cost of a bailout plan.

"I'm pleased I voted the way I did yesterday," Salazar said, "but we're still working hard, and we are dedicated to working something out in the next four to five days."

Salazar added that at least among constituents who took the trouble to contact his

Washington D.C. offices late last week, opposition to the financial rescue measure was nearly universal.

"On Thursday and Friday, we had 636 calls and e-mails and 436 of them were against any kind of bailout. Those were 'no' and 'hell no,'" Salazar said.
